Opening May 10, 2018, TCT x WMING (GAWA) presents Incarnation, a group exhibition featuring work by five contemporary Chinese artists and one guest British artist, curated by Fu Xiaodong from Beijing, China.

The Book of Incarnation notes that “a gentleman senses himself by feeling the external world.” Yet the external world is always changing — sentient beings, stones, and plants move through different experiences, and never remain the same. The five artists featured in Incarnation use ink, narration, image, and algorithm to exemplify different knowledge and perceptions of the relationship between humans and nature, between subjective and objective experience. This exhibit offers a visual book that invites the viewer to rethink his or her current relationship with nature, and offers methods to link traditional wisdom with modern experience.

A professor at the China Art Academy's Chinese Painting and Calligraphy Department, Lin Haizhong (b. 1968) is known for his traditional Chinese landscape paintings. From 2011 to 2013, he created 18 murals depicting various Chinese mythologies at Linyin Temple, receiving wide acclaim for their novel style and fine ink technique. Incarnation showcases Lin's recent works including Wang Wei's Poetry Album (2018) and Shaolin Temple (2018), which present the sublime essence of the natural world. Lin's artwork offers a sense of harmony, tranquility, and spirituality, drawing inspiration from Zen meditation and the harmonious relationship between humans and nature. His subtle use of ink reveals his intimate relationship with nature, and his close observation of all its fine details.

Based in Beijing, Wang Bingfu (b. 1936) is one of many prolific artists who studied at the Central Academy of Fine Arts in the 1950s. Wang draws on the stylistic traditions of Qi Baishi and Huang Binhong in his own scenic figure paintings. He focuses on presenting detail and interconnection within the pictorial space, using brushwork that is simple and powerful. While in a labor camp during the Cultural Revolution, Wang was not allowed to create artwork; when he started to paint once again after his release, his paintings exploded with his enormous passion for artistic expression, and he created 400 pages of drawings based on his life experience since birth. In Incarnation, Wang's artwork Allegory (2014-15) focuses on personal and social histories, depicting scholars as personifications of the artist himself. These scholars present the Chinese concept of the 'gentleman' (jun zi) who resists all social pressure to compromise.

Wang Mengsha (b. 1982) is a young artist in the field of contemporary ink art who has studied and lived in Australia. Her artwork integrates symbols from the West and East imbued with a twist of cartoonish cuteness. Using metaphors including Lacan's mirror stage and Zhuang Zi's butterfly, and symbols such as flowers and stones, she explores the interaction between the internal spiritual world and the external material world, between fantasy and mundanity. Wang's feminine, transcendental art offers a lighthearted experience for the viewer while exploring the balance of truth and power between these seemingly opposite realms of experience.

Yan Xiaojing (b. 1978) is a female artist who lived in Canada. She uses her experience of life overseas to take a closer look at Chinese cultural traditions. Yan uses sculpture and installations to make her own 'auspicious signs', traditional symbols of good fortune that are ordinarily considered to be rewards from heaven for good action. Through her use of these symbols in a contemporary context, Yan questions and explores the underlying moral standards that are reflected within these signs, and reinterprets the cultural and historical understanding of humans, heaven, and nature.

Cao Yuxi (b. 1990) is a new-media artist based in the United States. Mo is an abstract artwork which is created from the light of Brownian motion, the random motion of particles suspended in a fluid colliding with other fast-moving particles in the same medium. Based on this theory, Cao used the Java programming language to represent the movement of virtual particles in a manner almost identical to their behavior in the natural world.

Piers Secunda (b. 1976) is a British painter who has developed techniques over 20 years, to make objects out of paint. He developed an admiration for traditional Chinese art and craft during a residency at Island 6 in Shanghai in 2009. And he makes works which blend his unusual alchemical painting practice with the metaphors, history and philosophy of traditional Chinese art through a Western prism. Amongst the best known of these is his series of working Chinese Puzzle Balls, which he makes out of paint. Painting of the Chinese Puzzle Ball (2011-15) on display is modeled on the traditional motifs and designs.
